Belief in money (or credit) is precisely the same animal as religious belief, only more so, because belief in money is completely pre-conditioned and left unexamined during an average person's lifespan.

This is an international problem and it has persisted for thousands of years with evil consequences throughout the lifetime of this odd religious cult, which we find rooted in Babylon as a form of idolatry, at least 8,000 years ago.

While we might endlessly question and debate the Bible, the Koran, or the Vedas and spend entire lifetimes passionately disagreeing about this or that interpretation of scripture, detailing why we believe this and not that — belief in money remains totally subconscious for the vast majority of the world's population.

This belief is never thought of, much less discussed, critiqued, or overturned.

Take notice that this particular belief is a dire problem that has led directly and indirectly to the death and mutilation and crippling of millions of innocent people, to peonage and enslavement, the pollution of our planet, and perpetual war profiteering. This unseen "religion" has undermined all other governments and religions.

People are so indoctrinated and have undergone such rigorous behavioral programming and conditioning to accept money and to believe in money, that nobody even glances sideways at their underlying belief in money, much less do we consciously analyze the details or the basis for the belief.

It's hard to evaluate a belief if you don't know you have one, but, yes, everyone on this planet, from the most remote village in the rainforest to an airfield tarmac in Japan to the wheat fields of South Dakota to Burma and back again, everyone has been deeply and unconsciously indoctrinated to believe in money.

Why? Because a deeply ingrained subconscious and unexamined belief becomes akin to instinct and when people can no longer perceive that such a belief exists, much less question it, they become slaves to it.

Commerce, abuse, and enslavement go hand-in-hand, so much so, that one does not appear to exist without the others. The belief in money renders people vulnerable to coercion, control, abuse, and enslavement every time that money is introduced and left in the control of a few people, who are, unavoidably, the modern practitioners of this ancient and unexamined and idolatrous religion.

Whatever money you have in your pockets, take it out and really look at it.

In the case of the Federal Reserve Note you will find what the Bible calls a "graven image" completely covered in occult symbolism, from the little owl hidden in the border filigree of the one dollar bill to the pyramid (scheme) icon and the all-seeing eye and the portraits of dead people. Other currencies may not be so blatant but they have their telltale signs of occult practice and beliefs, too.

Money is an 8,000 year-old Substitution Scheme, and it may go back a lot longer than that.

It started out with substituting a little gold coin for a bushel of wheat of equal value.

Seemed fair enough at the time.

It has ended up with pieces of paper, silver delivery contracts, being substituted for billions of ounces of physical silver.

It has ended up with generations of people all over the world being ripped off and enslaved.

Maybe that's why God said, "Make no graven images".

The fundamental problem is not the pieces of paper or the coins; the problem is the belief in money itself. It's the religion of Mammon, unseen and unknown, corrosively undermining all other religions, all other governments.

Once you start substituting one thing for another, the entire world and everything in it, including the lives and bodies of living people, become "negotiable".

We are misled into the logical error of thinking that one thing can be substituted for another— when, objectively, it is already known that this isn't possible.

We just learned, again, that silver delivery contracts are NOT equivalent to ounces of silver metal.

In the same way, other pieces of paper called EUROS and Federal Reserve Notes and French Francs and German Deutsche Marks, are not equivalent to dried apricots, gallons of milk or steaks or dog food.

The illusion that paper of any kind is equivalent to a physical asset, is the greatest scam in history, and even the proposition that one physical asset can be equal to another, is deeply questionable.

Can strawberries be made equivalent to beef steak? Is a pound of cheese equivalent to a hacksaw blade? Or a silver coin?

As a matter of sober consideration, no. None of these exchanges are naturally equivalent.

Not only that, if you are allergic to strawberries they have no value at all; if you cannot eat beef steak because your religion forbids it, the same devaluation occurs. When you cross the barrier of kinds, equivalencing a dairy food to a metal tool or coin is even more tenuous.

If we step back far enough, we can see that we are dealing with the remnants of the infancy of mankind, an intellectual artifact of a time when fact and fantasy could blend and we could play games of "Pretend" and earnestly believe in them.

The existence and use of money in modern times is a child's game gone horribly awry, a reminder of how many times we have struggled over this same lesson.

We like to think that prices are determined by an impersonal thing called "the market" with the judgements of value reflected by the prices people will willingly pay or what they will trade for something in a free market, but for over a hundred years nothing approaching a free market has existed.

Central banks have had licenses to rig the prices and supplies of everything from shoelaces to cannonballs and Federal Reserve Notes for over a hundred years. The unerring and unbiased judgement of the free market has been replaced by the judgement of bureaucrats, their masters, and their cronies.

Now nobody knows what anything is worth in an open market, and the perpetrators of this system certainly don't want to open the gates and find out.

If we didn't believe in money, there would be no game, no scorecard, no need to earn everything twice — once when we produce the commodity or the service, and again when we earn the money to pay for it.

Even if we, during the transition back to adulthood and sanity, have to use a system of asset-backed money to limp trade along while we retrain our brains, we cannot afford to forget the final goal, which is to stop believing in the Phantom Middleman, stop paying foreign idol-makers to supply money to us—like so many addicts standing in line for our government dispensary fix.

We have to give up our belief in money and stop being seduced by this ancient unseen religion, for once we see it for what it is, we know it is an ugly, even ridiculous con game. We know it's arbitrary. We know it isn't real. And we know it's rigged against humanity.

The creative challenge for the whole world is simply this: how do we do away with money and belief in money, before it does away with us? And our world?

Sitting in a corner with our hands clapped over our ears isn't going to fix this logic-interrupt loop.

Simply realizing that we've suffered a form of behavioral modification and brain-washing to induce a false belief — a true mass delusion — doesn't immediately help. We become aware that we are being ripped off, but as a world economy, remain just as stymied and enslaved, temporarily unable to function without agreed-upon symbols of value to trade.

Central Bank Digital Currencies were never any answer; that was simply handing more coercive control over to the culprits and hoping for a good outcome.

Bitcoin, Ethereum, XLP — more fantasy based on more abstraction and control of a brand name.

There isn't enough gold or silver in the world to meet the transactional needs of 8 billion people, but that's no reason to kill them all.

Issuing debt notes "backed by gold" is the very definition of insane.

And we still need a way to turn cabbages into cell phones.

The people of this Earth are owed a vast amount of prepaid credit, hundreds of times more than any debt that any portion of the population owed.

That prepaid credit was paid in actual goods and services. And it's owed.

Gold and silver and land and other physical assets, and intellectual assets, such as our Given Names which were seized upon and copyrighted as property of the British Crown Corporation without our knowledge or consent, all belong to the living people of this planet.

We say it's time for us to erase all debts, public and private. We say it is time for all the estates of mankind to be returned unharmed and for each man and woman to have their little kingdom safe and secure from the debts and obligations of corporations.

It's time for families and communities and states and countries and regions to have the peace that is naturally theirs and the enjoyment of the abundance that is naturally theirs, too.

Each and every one of us, wherever we may be upon the Earth.

These resources of prepaid credit distributed worldwide combined with the return of our gold and silver currencies, is more than enough to meet the transactional needs of everyone in every country, and can be used to buoy us all over in one piece.

It's enough to buy mankind the time needed to outgrow the belief in money and outgrow the belief in scarcity, which to be fair, were both beliefs that were planted in our minds and induced by constructed circumstances calculated to cause us suffering.

These contrived false beliefs, like later narratives, have been used to manipulate us to our detriment.

We say that we are done with all that. The days when we could be misled and abused like little children are gone, and the days when those who did these crimes are brought to justice are here and now.
