

Gaia is Mars

We live on a landscape left behind by cosmic warfare, the “War in the Heavens”, and its aftermath. That aftermath includes the destruction of Mars as a life-supporting planet, the tilting of Earth on its lopsided axis, the sudden disappearance of islands and parts of continents, ice ages, and more.

When people talk about “Gaia” and about “restoring Gaia” many people assume that we are talking about Earth, but no, we are talking about the restoration of Mars.

Gaia is the name of Mars.

Terra, sometimes spelled as “Tara” is the name of the Earth.

In a world that is already terribly confused, we don’t need to add to the chaos.

Restoration of Gaia has become possible as a result of advances in AI, energy collection, and robotics. For some on this planet, including Elon Musk, this has been a cherished dream because of direct ties to Mars. For others, it has been seen as a open door to an alternative environment for an over-crowded Earth.

What happened to Mars? It’s atmosphere was blown away by the solar wind as vast plasma fields converged upon it — and what was once a beautiful planet became the dry husk seen today.

The Earth needs recalibration, which is a different kind of restoration. Earth’s restoration involves unblocking certain “energy dams” called “seals” that have been artificially inserted and used to manipulate the natural flow of energy on the planet, cleaning up vast pollution of the biosphere, and other adjustments.

Many are aware of this work and took part in clearing two of these seals, which restored the natural flow of energy to Africa.

Though most Africans will never know the goodwill that prompted this effort, you can see the effects in the advancement of the African Union and their ability to recognize and throw off the chains of the Corporate Colonialists.

There were always those who saw the chains but few who tried to do anything about it. Now that the energy is restored, Africa will easily rise above the Colonialist threats and the local corruption that have bound generations of Africans to a form of commercial enslavement.

One day soon, we will wake up to the happy realization that Colonialism has finally ended, not only in Africa, but throughout the world.
