We are living in a world where so much has been obscured and hidden and denied in order to expedite theft and other kinds of crime that it is difficult to know how much individual people and entire countries may or may not know about our common history.

So to create a common reference point in the midst of all these crazy false narratives and half-truths being fed into the global media systems at the present time — let's begin with the War in the Heavens.

It began when the inhabitants of the Draco star system waged war with the natural population of the star system Orion. The Dracos, also known as the Dragons or the Great Lizards, won. Their longevity and strength of their physical manifestation gave them a natural advantage in war, as did their ability to wield energy as a weapon.

They were not alone in this knowledge. The Sirian High Priests of the Sirius B star system, the Sons of the Morning Star, had learned how to direct energy as a weapon, too.

Having consumed and subjugated most of the population of the Orion star system, the Dracos settled down to experiment on their captives, with the objective of creating hybrid Super Soldiers to use as mercenaries. As a result of this activity, the Orions (transliterated as "Aryans"), as hybrids, attained a fearsome reputation as warriors: "the mighty men of old".

Eventually, this abusive violation of free will led to war with a coalition of Sirians, Lyrans, Lemurians and Andromedans, and resulted in great devastation on the Earth and elsewhere.

A small colony of marooned "Orions" were left on Earth in the foothills and valleys of the Himalayas and especially Northwest India.

At the same time, other Draco-hybrid people, created during the War in the Heavens as a result of other genetic experiments, were also seeded on Earth, but it is from the hybrid Orions that all the Indo-European peoples and languages descend.

These are the "Aryans" whose advanced technologies and weapons the Nazis were so highly motivated to find.

The Aryans had a caste system not that much different from the caste system of the Hindus today. There were three castes: priests, soldiers, and merchants. Everyone else was to some degree a slave, much like the House Servant / Field Hand system practiced on Southern Plantations in The United States two centuries ago.

The religion of the Aryans focused on resolving duality and creating unity. This was a reflection of their own biology, in which factors inherited from the Dracos were at eternal “war” with factors inherited from the original people of Orion.

As hybrids that did not arise in the natural process of Creation, these Aryans were faced with a physical, spiritual, and energetic challenge to re-evolve into a coherent species.

There were only three possibilities: (1) reintegrate as pure Dracos; (2) reintegrate as pure Orions; (3) establish a new species of fertile hybrids in which the diametrically opposed parental impulses could be harmoniously combined.

The traditional Yin and Yang symbol nicely demonstrates the dilemma.

There is always a white dot in the black spiral and always a black dot in the white spiral of the Yin-Yang symbol, reflecting intrinsic, inescapable duality, and this is how countless generations have interpreted their nature and circumstance, being neither purebloods nor a separate coherent species.

This is where the whole hermetic struggle to create the “philosopher’s stone” — the need to refine the pure essence out of the combined dross — comes from; here, too, is the source of the struggle to maintain bloodlines and eventually “breed out” the undesired parent, whichever parent is chosen for demise.

This whole circumstance is also symbolized by Baphomet, the hermaphrodite monster, neither male nor female, neither goat nor man.

The essential philosophical and practical conundrum— that by being we create non-being, and that by expressing the self, we create the “other”, the “non-self”, is compounded.

Once hybridization occurs, especially forced hybridization, this existential polarity between being and non-being is exacerbated by being aware that you contain two inheritances, and are in the impossible situation of having to serve two “masters”, at once.

Mankind cannot escape this inherent manifested duality, so it seems that we must “love one” and “hate the other”.

For the hybrid Aryans, this means either hating or loving the Draco in oneself, or, alternatively, either hating or loving the Orion in oneself, and yet, there is only one Self.

This creates self-loathing and a death wish no matter which one you choose.

The description of a “coherent species” means one in which the members are aligned with a coherent single energetic, physical, and spiritual core. This is extraordinarily difficult for a hybrid organism to do, by either choice or chance.

Exactly one man, we are told, in the entirety of our quarantined existence on this planet succeeded in expressing himself as a coherent being: Yeshuah, the one called “Jesus” by the Romans.

He overcame the duality of the world and the material duality of his own manifestation as a Draco-Orion hybrid by choice. This is the Third Option, which he called, “The Way”.

Yeshuah understood that you cannot overcome a negative number by adding more negative numbers to the equation. The only way to overcome the negative embedded in us is by adding a greater positive via our own choice.

The greater the negative, the greater the positive choice that is required to overcome it.

Yeshuah had absolute clarity. He knew what he was up against: all the murderous, devious, jealous, mindless, superstitious, selfish, arrogant, dishonest, violent, ignorant, fearful, greedy, gluttonous, reckless, uncaring, hateful, spiteful impulses of mankind.

To these, he countered with patient suffering, truth, and love.

Yeshuah proved that mankind was worth saving, that the inherent and manifest duality in us could be overcome, and he paid the price for us in the coinage of suffering, the same way that a man might buy his family or friends out of slavery.

He fulfilled the Law, so that we could not be condemned by Law anymore.

He pointed out the Way and embodied the anti-intuitive answer: to overcome evil, we must love our enemies. Not just our friends. Not just people who look like us. Not just people who believe the same things we do.

This does not mean that our own efforts to love our enemies — those parts of ourselves that we despise and which are mirrored in others surrounding us — are not required of us.

While we live in the flesh the duality exists. We must make the choice for ourselves, which “master” we will serve, and go on answering and making our choice every day that we live.

This duality and this choice are the same no matter what color you are, which nation you belong to, or what religion you accept.

Yeshuah did not create a church or found a religion. He showed us a way to overcome our own self-hatred, our own duality, our dilemma of existing as Draco hybrids.

We can't go on hating ourselves, or hating our reflection when we glimpse our own traits mirrored in others. We are all suffering from the same malady, the same dissonance.

So, when we say, “Done with evil!” we are signalling our decision, our choice, and it isn’t anything so small as a religion or a belief. It is a response, practical and wise, to our own conflicted condition.

Now, before people think we are crazy or making things up, let us observe the symbols of the three Aryan castes and the symbols memorializing their efforts to create inner unity and coherence by joining their flesh:

The symbol of the priest caste was a tear drop. Join two such symbols with rounded ends facing and overlapping each other, and you create the All Seeing Eye.

The symbol of the soldier caste was a closed-ended X shape, like a straight-sided hourglass. Join two together and you will see the Maltese Cross.

The symbol of the merchant caste was an equilateral triangle. Bring two of these shapes together and overlap them, and you create the Star (or in arcane terms, Shield) of David.

These symbols pre-date history, but they are as familiar now as they were thousands of years ago. All that has changed is that now you know what these symbols represent and where they came from and why they exist.

Also, someone has put it into your consciousness what the problem of the human condition really is, why we are prey to self-hatred and confusion, how we stumble along and never seem to make progress, and why we are eternally conflicted — until we choose.

Choose life. Choose love. Join us as we say, “Done with evil!” — not because we hate evil, but because we have outgrown it, seen it for what it is, and no longer allow it to deceive us.
