Reply and questions from Anna Maria Wilhelmina Hanna Sophia Riezinger von Reitzenstein von Lettow-Vorbeck:

Why is it that the Liars always copy us and try to take on our identities? Why do they always try to mirror and impersonate us?

Are they so lacking in creativity that they cannot stand in the light of day as anything but a poppet?

You say you are a Prince of Pomerania. How exceptional. My family roots in that part of the world included Potsdam, which is situated between Mecklenburg and Pomerania. Fond memories, apart from all the stupid wars.

It would seem that we have much in common, apart from the fact that we stand on the opposite side of the British Question and don't agree to surrender America to the British interests. We also object to Donald Trump trying to appoint you to the Office of President of the United States, apparently by renouncing such office himself? Is this true? Or just another silly internet hoax?

This is very queer, and it is unclear whether or not this is a hoax, or if he is trying to offload the office related to the UNITED STATES (INC.) which is not available to him as that corporation together with its offices was bankrupted prior to his First Administration, and recently settled by the International Court of Justice.

Or, perhaps, if we are to take this seriously, he is referring to the purloined Office of President of the United States that was fraudulently claimed on abandonment on February 2nd 1871? When the British Territorial U.S. Rump Congress voted to help itself to the assets of the American Federal Republic? Without notifying the American Federation of States and failing to publish any Notice to the American Public outside the District of Columbia? Really?

As usual, our out-of-control Federal Service Providers are trying to do all sorts of things that they can't actually do, mostly in an effort to save their own hides and benefit his Imperial Majesty, Charles III.

Just like everything else the British have tried to steal via lies and deceits and half-truths over the past two millennia, they have tried to steal Camelot and the Grail Quest, too, magically transporting a French village and citadel in the Auvergne to the middle of England, adjusting the narrative timeline by centuries, adding some extra fictional characters, and calling it good.

The Kingdom of Powys, however pastoral and bucolic albeit washed down with a good tang of Roman iron and salt in those days, was not Camelot. Never was. Never will be. Confusing — or trying to confuse Powys with Camelot, is like mistaking a Roman barracks for a French Cathedral.

It should be obvious that the name "Camelot" like the name "Lancelot" and the name "Guinevere" are all ancient French Celtic names (Guinevere is also found in Welsh- though it means "White Truth" in Ancient French and "White Shadow" in Welsh) that have precious little to do with England or Ireland.

Ireland's only contribution was "King" Eammon, Arthur's Grandfather who came down and lopped off a chunk of Wales as an inheritance for his Son, the ever-odious Uther Pendragon.

So now that we have that straight and the inevitable French Connection is laid bare by someone honest enough to dig through entire mountain-sized piles of British Bool Sheet in an effort to finally clear the air: yes, there was a real Camelot, but not in England, and the Grail Quest didn't originate in England, either. As a Prince of Pomerania, you should know this already, so....

We have to ask, why are you contributing to their fables? It seems like you are feeding the bears or walking on wet paint or encouraging the town buffoon to tell another bad joke— all ill-advised actions with no plausible explanation.

Is the Bank of England holding your gold ransom?

Or are you an Actor, like so many of these other Shadows beating their wings on the air?

Come to think of it, we haven't seen the actual Donald Trump in something like five years and watching all his body doubles roaming around the planet like ants on steroids is not only confusing, but annoying. If he's dead, please express our condolences....

Here is what our family has to say, at least in part, about Lancelot and Camelot and the relationship between Normandy and the Armoricans of Normandy, (Yes, that's where the name "America" came from, too.) and French Celtic Kingdom claims on all of central and southern England, Cornwall, and Wales that did, yes, lead to the Norman Conquest —

There's more, but this is probably sufficient to fill in the dots and connect them for all the old vampires of the Steppes. The name "Armentrois" can be interpreted in a couple ways — the Three Armies referenced by one interpretation includes the past, the present, and the future, while the simpler interpretation means Three Arms, like Lord Krishna, when he crushed the head of the World Snake with a single blow.

We really do hate for there to be any unpleasant disagreements about this among those who are essentially championing the rights of the living people, but I hate British fabrications and narratives, too.

It's only fair to observe that Fitzgerald and Kennedy are Black Scots, and Lincoln, despite Lincolnshire, isn't English—it's French, and other than being fabulously wealthy, we don't know what anyone named Kahlooni is doing in the middle of a Dark Ages dispute?

But.... (there's always a "but".... when Britain is involved) — why is a Prince of Pomerania, that is, a Prince of the Kingdom of Prussia, meddling around working for Britain, when the British are the Authors of his own ills? Why isn't he pressing his own claims for his own people? And why isn't he joining our effort instead, if he wants to talk about patriots?
