

Too Stupid to Be an Accident

International Public Notice

The United States of America —
Federation of States

Some years ago, we had a sit down meeting with some top British bureaucrats and bankers. We observed to them that their Bad Behavior and Breach of Trust with regard to their American contracts would inevitably sour their reputation throughout the world and be the cause of loss of both business and prestige.

Who, looking at what the Brits have done in America and throughout the Commonwealth — the whole Bait and Switch routine — in violation of their constitutional service contracts, the unlawful conversion of natural political status and aggravated identity theft of average Americans, Canadians, and Aussies, the illegal pretense of war used to seize upon land assets never belonging to them, and so much more — yes, who in their right mind would ever, under any circumstance, want to do business with Britain again?

They seemed unphased, arrogant, and reckless. Their attitude then, and apparently, now, was — who cares? We are badasses and crooks. You still have to do business with us.

We'll force you to do business with us.

We'll stuff our debt notes down your throats. We will force you to buy from the Company Store and charge whatever price we please.

Just look at what they did to the Nordstream gas pipeline, if you don't believe it.

And yet, ultimately, business has to be consensual. It has to be mutually beneficial in the long run. Otherwise, everyone piles up on the offenders and before you know it, balance and sanity is restored. The truth wins.

The entire European Union just had its "British Badass" Moment, and is also beginning to taste what we warned the Brits about yea, so many years ago: the EU didn't just "freeze" Russian assets to the tune of $245 Billion invested in the EU, they stole the Russian assets and made their return contingent upon Russia paying war reparations to Ukraine.

And Russia, very properly, brought suit against Euroclear, for allowing this; it has also begun the process of nationalizing all European assets in Russian Territory— around $800 Billion in assets, and they come out smelling like roses, with no contingency for return of the assets.

All these horrible losses have to be sustained by individual European corporations like BMW and Siemens and Deutsche Bank, and the idiot politicians thought they would come out ahead on this?

No, it's too stupid. It has to be part of a greater plan to collapse the economy of the EU and wipe out the EURO, because on top of the obvious $800 Billion loss versus the $245 Billion gain, the EU has crossed its own Rubicon, and they won't be able to do an "about face" and march back over the bridge they have burned.

The EU has allowed itself to politicize business to the extent that assets are not safe in the EU. The EU's idiotic sacrifice of trust and respect in the business arena over a war that is already lost, has led Viktor Orban, the Hungarian Prime Minister, to compare it to "tying ourselves to a corpse".

He's not wrong.

The asset migration out of the EU is happening faster than the flood of Somali migrants pushing in.

Over 2 million people have died in the war in Ukraine, half again as many have been injured and an estimated 11 million have been displaced, incalculable damage has been done to infrastructure, and the richest agricultural land on the planet has been polluted beyond recognition. But Russia won. And Russia's new weapons, including the new hypersonic Orshink missile, will ensure that Russia wins, if and when it has to defend its interests again.

If that wasn't enough, President Xi just reminded the EU of the Chinese-Russian Alliance. Xi is pretty much saying, Russia doesn't appear to need our help cleaning up the situation in Ukraine, but if they do, China will be glad to help.

The outcome of the war is not only done, it's done-done.

The odd thing is that it was done before it got started. The only wildcard was the United States of America, Incorporated, which under Biden or a similar Leftist regime, might have been goaded into siding with Ukraine.

As it is, all that remains is to cut a peace deal and begin picking up the pieces and bearing the costs.

Britain skirted around the EU theft of Russian assets, but it nonetheless has tried to undermine President Trump's efforts to broker a peace deal.

This seems anchored more to a dislike for Donald Trump than any practical reason for their Bad Behavior, egging Zelensky on, and blocking efforts to establish "world peace" in time for Christmas Eve — the magic time when the World Trust may be unlocked, if and only if, the whole world is at peace.

Even Benjamin Netanyahu saw the light and agreed to a ceasefire in Gaza, if "peace" means getting his paws on a share of World Trust assets.

Starmer, with the entire UK in rags and rages, with everyone from the King to the Labour Party MPs ready to walk, apparently doesn't see the need of billions of dollars-worth of social welfare and infrastructure money to help Great Britain and its people out of a death spiral. He hates his native country that much.

Nice little Nazis that Starmer and Ursula von der Leyen are (for God's sake, everyone, just look at their names and look at what they are doing) they want to see Britain burn, and burn it will, if someone doesn't grow a backbone and put an end to the problem that such leadership poses.

We suggest treason charges and an admiralty docket, but the Privy Council is waffling, too concerned about Prince Andrew's "secret" storage unit and its contents to save the country — that is, to the extent that England remains a country.

The English people still have Ivan Talbot, stubbornly standing up for England, still holding the Hereditary Office of Lord High Steward, still holding a claim on Shrewsbury. The “nasty little man” with his “pedantic Christian values” may live in Australia and be a bitter pill for some— as he was for the late Queen, but he is loyal and he is Christian and he has a credible, honorable lineage that has fought for England since Crecy.

His parents endured Burma during World War II.

Talbot could, if called upon, take the Coronation Vow with a straight face and not secretly void it by signing new legislation within three days. Any Muslims who wanted to cause trouble, riot, rape Christian girls, slash people on British subways, etc., would be put to sea in an open boat or worse, after a proper trial, of course. Immigration laws would be enforced. No wishy-washy exists in Ivan Talbot.

It would be back to tea and crackers in no time flat, and that is still an option that the beleaguered English people have.
