The United States of America —
Federation of States

While we all slept and listened to national news about a snow storm in Chicago:

Africa united against state terrorism and backs action against Israeli genocide in Gaza. This shifts the balance of world power worldwide. For the first time in centuries, Africa speaks. The whole continent.

They are getting much the same shocked disbelief as we encountered when we first raised our hands and began to bring forward the Great Fraud. Everyone stared at us like Talking Horses. They couldn't quite believe what they'd heard or understand who said it.

The reaction to Africa's stand against genocide in Gaza has much the same flavor. The political party ideologues and Old Power players are caught completely off-balance and being forced to recalculate absolutely everything about their plans and assumptions going forward.

They can no longer count on easy access to African resources at whatever price they care to pay. Their entire network of spies and political toadies is being vastly undermined. And instead of being a quiet and subservient backyard for Europe, Africa is rising.

The implications of this are staggering, politically, economically, and militarily. Europe has around 450 million people; Africa has over a billion. Europe's land mass and resource base is tiny compared to Africa — a fact that was long overshadowed by Europe's technological advantages.

That advantage is being left in the dust as new trade, education, and technology options open up for Africa with the BRICS alliance. While some people view this as a political issue and snarl about Communism, the actual factor driving the relationship of Africa and BRICS is the simple fact that Africa has gold and plenty of it.

Therefore, it makes all the sense in the world that Africa will want to be part of BRICS and will trade in gold. This is what Muammar Gaddafi saw and what motivated his call for an African Union and a single gold standard African currency.

The United States certainly can't say anything about this and should never have done anything in opposition to this (the invasion of Libya), because the African nation-states are simply doing what we did ourselves. They are following our playbook.

The unprovoked attack on Libya and vicious treatment given to the popular Libyan Government is perhaps the single-most hypocritical action any U.S. Government Administration was ever bullied into—and among the most regrettable.

The U.S. attack on Libya and removal of Gaddafi delayed but could never stop the forces tending to unite Africa and place Africa on the gold standard as a major player in the world economy. Nature decreed that outcome, not Muammer Gaddafi.

The cost of the attack on Libya goes far beyond the cost of armaments or even lives lost; it cost us the trust and the respect and the goodwill of many African nations that would otherwise welcome trade and good diplomatic relations with The United States.

We were played to our own detriment to attack Libya and by the same pernicious European interests that engineered the Great Fraud. We betrayed our own values in the process.

We will have to rebuild our identity in the world community as decent rational people and also have to rebuild our reputation as reliable business partners — assumptions destroyed in Africa by the Libyan campaign, the Gates Foundation vaccine horrors, and the meddling of the CIA in Zimbabwe that has resulted in multiple changes of government and great political strife.

Zimbabwe is one of the most beautiful countries in Africa, blessed not only with mineral wealth, but with fantastic diversity of animal and plant life. It is among the last habitats on Earth for rare species like the Black Rhino.

When investors look at the Zim bonds and salivate over the big returns they are anticipating — reflect that most of those bonds were issued as a result of political corruption and that the people of Zimbabwe did not benefit from their issuance. Stop and consider that the funding of those bonds requires strip mining, and destruction of one of the most beautiful places on Earth.

What else happened this week?

Lord Hermer effectively admitted that Britain has its dirty, dirty fingers in the Fentanyl drug trade and is profiting from importing the drug —and perhaps more importantly, the base chemicals to make it, into The United States.

One of the biggest drug busts in our history wasn't the capture of finished street drugs, but instead, the capture of the base chemicals needed to make the street drugs. And that was being expedited by our own Border Patrol officials.

We have long suspected Britain's involvement in the explosive growth of the Fentanyl and Methamphetamine crisis in this country, because we can look back to China's experience during the Opium Wars and trace the same scripted operation with the same overall impacts being repeated here.

It wasn't until Trump started intercepting carrier vessels on the High Seas and collecting data captured from their ship's manifests, that the evidence of British involvement coalesced; Lord Hermer's move to stop sharing satellite surveillance information with The United States through the Five Eyes initiative is seen for what it is — an attempt to protect Britain's illicit drug-related and other smuggling activity in the Caribbean and worldwide.

They've been benefiting themselves commercially by pushing drugs on a civilian population — ours, just as they pushed opium products on the Chinese more than a century ago, and Trump caught them at it. That's the core of the dust-up, not only concerning the drug trade, but the illegal arms trade and human trafficking, too.

Now they are taking their surveillance satellite feeds away, so that their own equipment isn't giving away the position of their smuggling operations.

Our so-called, “special relationship” with the British Government is at an end, but that’s all right. It’s best not to consort with criminals. We will put up our own satellites and be better off for it. Nobody can ever rely on British “intelligence” anyway.

Lord Hermer has circumstantially admitted that the British Government has a finger in the pie, but after all the other criminal and immoral activity we’ve all suffered at the hands of this one particularly corrupt and evil government, nobody should be overly surprised.

At the same time, Keir Starmer nonchalantly proposed to seize Royal Estate lands in Cornwall that have been under Royal Guardianship for 700 years — to build cheap (but modern) Council Housing developments. He did this without the nicety of consulting with the Royals about this or developing a mutually agreeable plan.

When Prince William quietly objected, Starmer said that “that family” had no say in it and that they were basically assuming powers that disappeared hundreds of years ago.

The backlash has been immediate, overwhelming, and vicious, with Starmer and the entire Labor Party being hit harder than they have ever been hit in living memory.

We don’t expect Starmer’s government to survive, no matter how it rigs the elections.

The depth of the British people’s resentment and rejection is sending tsunami-like shockwaves through the political pundits and pollsters alike.

You can take their Fish and Chips. You can starve them, beat them, send them to the ends of the Earth, fry them in the deserts, lose them in the jungles, drown them in the sea, and they will stomp along and spit, but hurt their Royal Family, personally, and that’s it.

So, Mr. Prime Minister Starmer has bitten the Big One in Britain, and he was so arrogant, so clueless, that he thought it would play well to his political base and he’d be applauded for dissing the Crown Prince and seizing Royal Estate property.

Big mistake. Big.

Despite their many foibles and iniquities, their palace squabbles, their petty performances, corruption, selfishness, and other less-than-wholesome attributes as an institution, the Royal Family is still a family. It’s not a political party.

When the Brits look at their government, however they may be deceived and betrayed, it still wears a human face. And once in a while, the Royals still rise to the occasion and speak for the people of Britain, which is more than Keir Starmer ever does.

It’s been an incredible week for world politics, with major shifts falling like dominoes.

Africa is back, Britain’s dirty laundry in the smuggling and drug trade is circumstantially exposed, the Five Eyes Surveillance Empire and our purported “special relationship” with Britain is falling apart, and Keir Starmer and the whole Labor Party is on the ropes in Britain....things are looking up.

We say this because any relationship we’ve had with the British Government(s) since the 1860’s has been founded on force and fraud, and much the same is true for the people of the Home Islands, Commonwealth, and all the countries occupied after World War II.

The current tide of events bodes well for humanity as a whole, because the path forward leads away from narrow-minded political ideologues like Starmer who have been produced like widgets by government-controlled universities, away from corrupt “administrative government”, and away from Corporate Feudalism.

The moral decay that tolerates genocide for the sake of commercial gain, like the lies and omissions we accept in other ways, about other subjects, is a problem worldwide. Africa has now said what needed to be said about the genocide in Gaza and the Israeli Government’s treatment of the Palestinians.

Take a deep breath. We can all be honest again.

Now, we can speak to Britain’s continued rampage of colonialism, which it never gave up —simply redefined and pursued in other jurisdictions, under different forms of law. We can talk about entire countries, including ours, being illegally occupied by mercenary forces acting under color of law.

We can see that Britain caused the whole problem in the Middle East by leasing land it didn’t own to Jacob Rothschild. We can see that our country has been used as “the Muscle” for British oppression, colonialism, and imperialism all over the world.

We can admit that we were deluded, defrauded, and denigrated by our own federal subcontractors, that we were lied to and bullied, asset-stripped, coerced, illegally press-ganged and conscripted, misled, and misrepresented to the rest of the world.

All of that, and more. We’ve been the goats, the store fronts, the Fall Guys, the clueless Rubes, the indentured servants and the slaves; yes, we have. We’ve been dead asleep at the wheel for six generations, but no more. We’re awake now. Like Rip Van Winkle or Robinson Crusoe, we are re-entering the world.
